

Friday, November 13, 2009

Dear Jeff,

My name is David and I am presently living on my own and working in the Midwest. I have been dating for about 2 years. In that time, I've connected with a few Shadchanim, mostly in New York. Lately, dating for me has become particularly frustrating. I heard about your Shidduch Vision program and I am amazed.

You see, I own and operate a business here in the Midwest, and it is difficult for me to take the time to get to New York, spend the weekend dating, only to be told that the girl I've dated didn't think enough of the experience to want to come to The Midwest to see me or vice versa. And often the issues that came to our attention could have quickly become apparent through a brief meeting, that, if I understand how it works, ShidduchVision would have offered us.

I've even traveled to New York to date a girl who was coming in from out of town, only to find out once I arrived that her travel plans had gotten messed up. When she eventually showed up, neither one of us felt the other was what had been described. The result? Yet another wasted weekend in my dating life.

I was once set up with a girl from New York and agreed to fly in to meet her. The shadchan suggested I call her to arrange the date prior to me flying in. Post conversation I was 98% sure that this girl was not going to be my bashert but was forced to continue with travel plans due to the commitment I already made.

I believe I am sufficiently sensitive to the concepts of Bitachon, etc. to understand that all these experiences are part of the process that I am meant to go through to find my beshert.

Your idea gives me renewed chizuk.

Now, I need not commit so much time and money-not to mention the emotional exhaustion the experience can cause. Allowing me to meet a prospective young lady, and allowing us to spend some time getting to know each other so that by the time we arrange to meet face to face we know that there is a reasonable possibility, will make a major difference for me...and for all other singles.

THANK YOU!!

-David